W3C survey:
For the first time, W3C is conducting a community-wide survey. We want to get to know our community better, investigate needs, and understand our community's vision of how we fulfill our mission for the world-wide web.

This survey is being run through Typeform, an online survey platform that supports all major operating systems, is accessible, and has been tested to confirm compatibility with assistive technologies.

This survey is open to W3C Members and people who participate in W3C group activities, and anyone involved in the Web. It is anonymous and takes 6 minutes or more to complete.

We ask that you use the link that you received in email if you did. We prepared a survey that has 4 additional questions that are specific to W3C Members. So two versions of the survey are being circulated, one for members and one for non-members.

Please help us disseminate the links of the survey for the rest of the community with your group(s), team(s), your networks, your friends that are interested in the impact of web standards on humanity.

The survey closes on Friday 13 September 2024. We look forward to hearing from you.

media team:
folks I am kind of linking this work in motion we have going in X/Twitter Spaces and I want to double down on it as a theme for a while see how it goes. My reasoning is it fits with a lot of our goals for community while reducing a lot of the friction we have had producing regular standalone in-world events. Quick pro & con table :

Pro:
Meet people where they are: increased walk-in impulse audience who just happen to be on the platform and see the space is live and join (...... and find it is of real interest and thereby discover OMI!?)
Low Friction (if you have a x-twitter account)
Easier to get speakers for same reason(s)
Can arrange an afterhours 3D world and promote it in the session with links

Con:
Single Platform Lockin and all that baggage
Audio only

.....applying a quick Ben Franklin ruler to the list seems like it's a winner but happy to hear alternative perspectives before booking any speakers things to think about:

transparency and privacy policy. So a google form that only goes to one person may feel too selective. But too public may violate sensitive information.
Github as suggestion space may work well - there's some pre-vet in that you need to have an account.
Consensus is just run with it, grow organically, tackle issues as they come up. Discuss in meetings as events get suggested and developed, as we have been doing.

Michael Jared shared Blender - Python stuff to align with glTF in the lounge, after the meeting. Should be a demo!
