When we spend time together, we learn from each other. A critical part of our community development relies on our ability to communicate and document our findings. If you look at the agenda above, it's easier to see how our weekly meetings could soon lack enough time to discuss all of our working groups efforts. We would like to propose that a small team form to help plan the process for demo days where we will share our recent findings with each other.

We created ticket #59 to kick off the planning. We have a number of questions before we can press play. For example:

- how often should / can we meet?
- how should we handle signing up to speak?
- what is considered in and out of scope?
- who can participate?
- where do we document our findings for others?
- is this actually going to be useful for our community?
- how do we keep it lightweight and simple? This should be about sharing knowledge or recent lessons learned related to Interoperability, Open Source Metaverse, and OMI's work. These are separate from lightning talks which can be about anything.

This conversation could take up an entire meeting, so I propose that we form a small team and plan the process before setting a date.
